In much the same way that an endowed chair supports a university professor, endowed funding in athletics provides individual teams with the critical financial support necessary to compete at the highest levels.

Demand for the best student-athletes and coaching staff is fierce, and endowments make the baseball program an attractive option for the most talented candidates. Further, because endowments are held in perpetuity and invested for the long term, these gifts provide one of the most secure sources of future revenue possible. And these funds will always be dedicated to supporting Northeastern baseball, creating ongoing operational support for the team's use on a yearly basis.

Endowing the Player Development Fund for Northeastern baseball will recognize the transformative contributions of Coach Glavine to the sport of baseball. It will acknowledge the many student-athletes whose lives have been impacted by his leadership, character, determination, and commitment to hard work. And this endowed fund will provide a first-class experience for our players, enhancing their performance and development.

The Player Development Fund will provide:

1. State-of-the-art training technology, coaching, and developmental equipment
2. Enriched opportunities for nutrition and sports performance
3. Positional training and instruction
4. Unique individual and team travel experiences

"Northeastern Baseball is good for college baseball. We are what, I think, college athletics are supposed to be. These are real student athletes. They go to a top-50 school, they have to grind for everything. Nothing comes easy."

—Mike Glavine, Head Coach
